

About Learnon-line.co.uk

Learnon-line.co.uk is a web-based training provider who offers online health and safety training (in particular the NEBOSH General Certificate – new scheme) for busy people who cannot find the time to attend traditional training courses.

Our programmes are unique in terms of the way they are offered, i.e. on a roll-on, roll-off basis with the support of an online tutor. Because they are web-based, the system provides links to up-to-date relevant sources of information together with brief introductory notes and lessons within the learning environment. Lessons contain short questions which help you to access your progress. In addition, assignments which are based on exam-style questions are assessed by your online tutor, giving you an excellent guide to what will be expected of you in the actual examination together with feedback on the responses you give.

We offer training towards the NEBOSH General Certificate (New Scheme) in a variety of modules. You can enrol for the whole programme (NGC1 and NGC2), or NGC1 and NGC2 separately, or on an element-by-element basis. Costs vary depending on the option you choose, but all are very competitive compared to face-to-face training – and there are no travel costs incurred!

For a detailed description of the service we offer, please read the following notes. Our website, www.learnon-line.co.uk gives more specific information together with current prices and an online enrolment with secure payment facility.

Enrol today and gain a well respected health and safety qualification!

How it Works

When you enrol on one of our online courses you will be provided with:

- access information to enable you to login to our virtual learning environment (active after 5 working days of enrolment - please see our terms and conditions)
- a learning and assessment programme designed to lead you through the unit syllabus
- the support of an online tutor who will monitor your progress, grade your assignments and provide feedback information using a variety of communication techniques such as forums, chat rooms (on selected units only), etc.

In order to use LearnOn-Line.co.uk you must have:

- a current/valid external email account
- access to the Internet, ideally via a broadband connection
- access to a Word Processor application

Learning and assessment programmes (courses) are designed on a topic basis and should be worked on in the topic order set out in the programme. Each topic consists of a series of learning activities. These may be in the form of:

- slides containing bullet point references
- text passages
- documents and leaflets issued by external organisations
- hyperlinks to external web sites
- sound/movie snippets

On-course assessment is in the form of:

- questions linked to progress points in the course
- quizzes and tests
- written assignments - which require word processed responses that are uploaded to the system for assessment by an online tutor.

The virtual learning environment which houses our learning and assessment programmes enables online tutors to track candidate usage and performance whilst they are studying. Tutors are therefore aware of candidate progress and performance throughout and can advise on areas of weakness if needed.

Candidate forums are a feature of our courses. These provide a means of collective learning and the swapping of experiences and expertise.

Some courses - e.g. NEBSOH - require external examinations to be taken in order to achieve formal recognition. Kawns Safety Services Ltd. are accredited to offer external examinations and would be pleased to arrange this for you.

Obviously, online learning is not everyone's cup-of-tea, but it does provide a number of key advantages - such as:

- learning at your own pace at home or in the workplace
- one-to-one support and feedback on your assessed work
- self-testing using the online quizzes which form part of a learning and assessment programme
- no traveling time* (*except external examinations)
- no travel costs* (this can be a significant expense when attending a college programme)
- competitive course fees (generally significantly cheaper than traditional courses)

Please view our website for further information www.learnon-line.co.uk.

If you prefer more traditional forms of learning Kawns Safety Services Ltd (www.kawns.com) offer a wide range of Health and Safety training programmes at their centre in Gosport, Hampshire.
